

From the Editor's Desk

In this issue, we have introduced another new feature—Standards & Codes. A few examples are given to indicate the kind of write ups we would like to include in this feature. The feature is open to the readers to participate actively. It is believed—participation paves the path to professionalism.

This year, WELDING-85, the National Welding Seminar is being organised by the Calcutta Branch of the Indian Institute of Welding. First announcement and call for papers have been circulated to all members already. This offers another opportunity to participate in the deliberations and discussions to either convince others or get convinced; to assess the past achievements and the present state of welding technology in India; to set the goals for oneself and also for ourselves. We get to know also each other and the welding fraternity.

We look forward to your direct involvement. To start with, it may even be through the Reader's Card enclosed.
